Nick Faren With Famed Bomber Group in Italy

Staff Sgt. Nick Faren, Torrance, Calif., flew as a turret gunner over the Ala railroad bridge in the Brenner Pass when the 310th Mitchell bombardment group flew its 800th combat mission. Commanded by Col. Peter H. Remington, of Cape Vincent, N. Y., this unit still holds the bombing record for Army Air Force medium and heavy groups.

Maj. Gen. John M. Cannon, commanding general of the Mediterranean Allied Tactical Air Force, sent the following congratulatory message to Brigadier General Robert D. Knapp, Auburn, Ga., commanding general of the B-25 wing:

"The 310th Bomb Group, in completing its 800th combat mission, is a tribute to your wing and particularly to the officers and men of the 310th Group. What they have accomplished should, however, not alone be measured in the number of missions flown. Their effort throughout the Mediterranean campaign has been a most important, contributing factor to our overall successful air operations. I am sincerely proud of the record made by the 310th Bomb Group. Please convey my congratulations to them."

Sergeant Faren has been overseas seven months and has been awarded the Air Medal with two oak-leaf clusters. He is also entitled to wear the European-African-Middle East theater ribbon with two battle stars.

His parents, Mr. and Mrs. Victor Faren, live at 2408 Andreo ave.

Marine Sergeant, Who Couldn't Get Enough of War, Explains It to Child

True Americanism and Democracy, with its patriotism and love for the home, is reflected in a letter sent to the Torrance Herald, written by a U. S. Marine Corps sergeant who could not get enough of the fight, to his little daughter explaining why he is not home with her.

SGT. WM. C. EWING

While the sergeant probably would object to the printing of the letter, brought to the office by his parents, it is published because of the true devotion to country and home which it expresses in terms for the child, of whom he has seen little, to understand.

The author is Sgt. William C. Ewing, now in the South Pacific. He enlisted in the Marine Corps just before war was declared, served three years on the U. S. S. Chester, fought in several battles in the South Pacific including Pearl Harbor, Coral Sea, Marshall Islands and Guadalcanal; was wounded and honorably discharged in May, 1944, only to reenlist and take a job as a physical instructor to build himself up so that he could get back and do his duty to the fullest.

Sergeant Ewing was in the Navy hospital at Portsmouth, Va., for five months before reenlisting. After spending thirteen months as instructor at Grove City, Pa., he was transferred to Camp Pendleton to be later sent to the South Pacific.

Sergeant Ewing's wife, Harriet, and his daughter, Ann, are staying at the sergeant's parents home at 1549 W. 24th st., while his wife is working at the National Supply selling war bonds. Ewing's father, C. G. Ewing is building ships at San Pedro. "A letter to my dearest darling daughter:

"Here are a few lines from your Pop, that you know very little about, but I want you to know that I miss you very much and love you with all my heart. Honey, I just thought I would try to tell you a few things that you should know, now that you are growing up so fast and I won't be there to tell you. You just ask your Mommie and I am sure that she will set you right on anything that is not clear to you. You see, when I was a little boy, I had my Mom to talk things over with. Pop was always too busy because he was working hard to make a home and try to teach me the right way to live. I made Pop pretty sad sometimes, but he always forgave me, even if he never told me, I could see, and I am really proud of him for it, because he let me find out what life was all about the hard way and when you do it that way, you never get mixed on which is right or wrong. If you always listen to your Mommie, you will always do the right things, because you have a swell Mommie like I have, and she never will tell you to do anything that is wrong.

"Sometimes a little girl wonders what the old Red, White, and Blue stands for. Well, it stands for more than can ever be put in words. Most of all, it means freedom, and that, sweetheart, is the reason your Daddy is not home with you now. I hope you will understand this someday.

"You hear so many people say, 'Well, I think you have done your share,' even your Mommie has said that to me, but she was wrong, because when you stop and think of some who come over and never return—they who have done all they could for their country, but as long as you can stand up or crawl, to hold up and keep what our people before us have done, we still have not done our share until this is all over. My Mommie always told me, when I was a little boy, and we were not even thinking of a war, that if war ever came and I was old enough to be one of the first to go. Your Grandmommie knows what it means to love her country and give up everything to make it safe for the little fellows to come. You see, before I was born, there were a lot of fellows who went over to fight for me and they never knew I was even coming. So, it was my turn to do the same for some one else that is not here yet. He will come into a world that is safe, and won't have to be afraid, and you can live your life the way you want to without anyone telling you where to live or work, and can love anyone you want and no one will have the right to tell you not to.

"Someday you will know what I am trying to tell you now. When you stand and look at a pole with nothing on it and then, all at once, you hear a band start playing, the most beautiful tune you ever heard or ever will, and then you see a beautiful flag of red, white, and blue, being raised, your chest swells up, you feel that you will burst with pride, your eyes fill with tears, you'll strut and be the proudest person that you can stand and look at it with a clear mind, knowing that it is a part of you, and that you will stand up for it as long as you are able.

Sometimes men have gone as far as they thought they could, and when they see the flag raised up on some land that they have just won, they get strength they never knew they had. Some of them can hardly walk, but they try their best to strut, they are so proud to be serving a country so wonderful, because they know that someday, they will be going home, back to the ones they left behind, back and do the things they had always dreamed about.

So, you see, Daddy has five reasons why he is over here: Your Grand-dad, Grand-mom, Auntie, You and your Mommie. That is worth fighting for, because I know I have the best family in the whole world, and I know they will never let me down, now or ever.

"Honey, no matter what any one says, always be proud of the fact that you were born in the good old U. S. A."

Elie Le Blanc In Invasion At Iwo Island

Coast Guardsman Elie Le Blanc Jr., son of Mr. and Mrs. Elie Le Blanc of Torrance, California, participated in his second invasion when his LST aided in the assault on Iwo Jima.

A veteran of the Guam invasion, LeBlanc is now serving aboard a coast guard-manned LST which is part of a vast United States amphibious force which carried the Pacific war to the inner defense belt of the Japanese Empire.

At Guam, LeBlanc was co-swain of a landing craft which made several trips into the beach during initial operations carrying troops and equipment. "It was quite a show," said LeBlanc, "one time we had landed on the beach and were unloading when a heavy concentration of Jap mortar fire really made us dig in. For several hours we had to lay on the beach with mortars exploding all about us. It was really hell."

During the attack on Iwo, he took over the duties of co-swain of an LCV (P), transporting troops and supplies onto the beach. While attached aboard another LST for the Guam assault, LeBlanc was awarded a citation issued to each officer and man aboard his LST by the Task Force commander. It read as follows:

"The Task Group Commander notes with pride and satisfaction the highly commendable and courageous manner in which the commanding officer, and crew conducted themselves under trying conditions in the face of a large concentration of enemy fire, glued to the beach as the ship was and coming from a position unknown to them, thus depriving the vessel of the opportunity to return this fire."

LeBlanc entered the Coast Guard in Aug. 1, 1942, and received his boot training at Alameda, Calif. Prior to enlistment he was employed as a machinist at the National Supply Company in Torrance.

At present, he is looking forward to finishing the job out here so that he can return home to his wife, the former Margie Perry of Long Beach, and their 2-year-old daughter, Diana Kay.

At present the LeBlancs are making their home at 904 1/2 Puritan ave., Downey Calif.
